Tanning Insects Into Metal.

Some months ago a German chemist was making a chemical analysis of certain insects. The process involved covering them with powdered copper oxide and heating them in small platinum crucibles in an atmosphere of carbon dioxide. He was astonished to discover that the insects turned to metal, with the delicate markings and structure preserved. As a result, museums may preserve rare specimens indefinitely.

SEEN FROM THE SIDELINES

If the Hamilton Cardinals are as good as the advance notices which precede them, our Napanee Leafs are going to have their hands full in subduing the Softballers from the Ambitious City, who play here on Thursday evening. Of course, it was known that the team which was able to defeat such teams as Patricias and Supremes of Toronto, would be a good one, but it seems that this year the Cardinals are to make a real effort for the Provincial Senior title, and have assembled as strong a team as any in the business.

Look at their outfield! Nan England, Elsie Botten, Evelyn Almas, Ora Semmons, Peggy Hall and Anna Quinlan. To some, this may be just a list of names, but the followers of the game will remember that Miss England is credited with having hit the longest home run ever seen in the game, that Miss Almas is also well-known as a home run hitter, and that Miss Botten is classed as the finest outfielder playing girls' ball to-day. She is a type of player who makes everything look easy.

Think about their infield! Edith Hulls, Agnes Kress, Eileen Ouimet, Elsie Greenwood, Eva Davies. Miss Hulls is considered the best first base player in Ontario. She has been playing that position on senior teams for seven years now, so she ought to know it by instinct. Miss Greenwood a tall slim girl, can be counted on to give the fans more than one thrill by her one handed catches and Agnes Kress, at third, is another senior player who has made good. Miss Ouimet is the peppy shortstop, and also is known as the midget pitcher, having won many a game in the box.

Consider the batteries! Lil. Langley, Ora Semmons and Ruth Linkert, catchers, Eileen Ouimet, Reva Cheriton, and Claire Fraxleyn, pitchers. With these experts for battery duty, these Cardinals should go a long way.

How do they look to you? We have Margaret Douglas and Dorothy Johnston ready to pitch, with probably either Mary Simpson or Hazel O'Neill for catching duties. Marion Grass has been moved to first base, and the other field positions will be well filled The outfield is as yet more or less uncertain, but we believe that Manager Joe Killorin is able to produce an expert by classers from the crowd of aspirants for regular places on the team. Our girls will be seriously as in the sight of our Leader, the Lord Jesus Christ.

A dance will be held after the game to entertain the visitors, and all the spectators will be welcomed. It is understood that several of the fans have already decided to entertain the Hamilton girls over night, so that there are still one or two wanted to take a visiting player. If you know of such a kind hostess, notify Miss O'Neill, at Robinson's.

From the advance sale of seats it seems that there will be a bumper crowd for the game. This is the hope so, for the Leafs are at big expense in bringing this team so far, and the town should appreciate their efforts and provide a real fast game. Let's go!

Strikes Up to 24.

When a clock strikes 13, it is ordinarily assumed that there is something wrong with it. This is no longer so in Freienwalde, Germany. The clock in the tower of a church there not only has been equipped with a dial running up to 24, but the striking mechanism has been altered so that the clock strikes up to 24. The 24-hour system was introduced for the German railways and post offices, but Freienwalde is the first town to accept it.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

BY G. C. TRUMBULL,
(Editor of The Sunday School Times.)

THE WICKED HUSBANDMEN.

(May be used with Temperance Applications.)

Sunday, May 27.—Mark 12 : 1-12 ; 13 : 1-37.

Golden Text—The Lord knoweth the way of the righteous ; but the way of the ungodly shall perish. (Psa. 1 : 6.)

Some parables of our Lord's were impossible of understanding except by the spiritually enlightened, His true followers who trusted in Him. But in this lesson He speaks a parable, the meaning of which His worst enemies could not misunderstand. It described them in terms inexorably clear. It showed their wickedness and their enmity to God so plainly that any listener would be shocked. There was terrific condemnation in this parable ; for there must be terrific condemnation of all who reject God and His loving, gracious offer of salvation.

The parable commences with a "certain man" who "planted a vineyard." He did everything that could be done to make a richly productive vineyard, setting a hedge about it, digging a place for the wine vat, for the treading out of the juice of the grapes, building a tower from which the watchman could see all that was occurring. Then he let out this vineyard to husbandmen, and "went into a far country." It takes confidence in others to entrust one's property to them and go far away. God has trusted His people Israel in just this way. He has favored the Jews above any other people on earth. He entrusted to them the keystone land of all the earth when He gave it to their father Abraham. He entrusted to them "the oracles of God." (Rom. 3:2). That is, the stewardship of receiving and transmitting the unique, holy, and inspired Scriptures of God, which constitute the Bible, has been entrusted to this people only among all the peoples of the earth. Even the Messiah after the flesh, the Son of God, was born of the Jews. Could God favor any people more highly ? He could not and He did not.

Then the parable goes on to describe the return that these husbandmen made to the owner of the vineyard for the great honor conferred upon them. When he sent one of his servants to them, at the proper season, to "receive from the husbandmen of the fruit o fthe vineyard," they beat him and sent him away empty. Another was sent, and was killed. And so on with many others—all of whom were rejected—some wounded, some killed. The owner of the vineyard was very patient and long-suffering to allow this to go on, but he did.

He had one son, an only son, his well-beloved. He sent him also last unto them, saying, "They will reverence my son." And they killed him. They did it deliberately, purposefully, reasoning that, because he was the heir, by killing him they might gain his inheritance for themselves.

The Lord asks His listeners the question, which answers itself, "What shall therefore the Lord of the vineyard do "? There was only one thing to do : to destroy the false stewards who had not stopped at murder, and to giv the vineyard to others. The Jewish leaders to whom our Lord was speaking this parable knew exactly what He meant They knew He was talking about them. It only deepened their purpose to do away with Him.

Sin is always blind. They were not only murderers, but suicides. By rejecting the Son of God they were putting away fro mthemselves their only chance of eternal life. So does every sinner who rejects Christ.

Yet the Lord made the matter inescapably plain as He said : "Have ye not read this scripture ; The stone which the builders rejected is become the head of the corner"?

In chapter 13, included in this lesson, the Lord goes on with marvellous teaching, as He writes history in advance The prophecies He uttered were of two sorts ; some of them were fulfilled within the next half century after He spoke; some of them have not yet been fulfilled, but it will be to the leier, as God's prophecies always are.

In the prediction of the destruction of the husbandmen, and in the prediction of the destruction of the temple, He foretold the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. This came to pass.

Then He went forward more than nineteen centuries in prophecy, and foretold the ending of this age of grace, by His personal, visible, bodily return. He foretold the great tribulation which shal leome upon all the earth, centering in "the time of Jacob's trouble" (Jer. 30 : 7) . For as Israel is the most favored of all nations, her failure to receive God's favor must necessarily be visited by the severest judgment in all history. A time is coming, and it is in the near future, when poor Israel shall suffer persecution, of which there have been foregleams through the centuries in the outbursts of anti-Semitism that have stained the pages of history.

False Christs are to appear before the coming of the true Christ; many shal be deceived by these ; but none will be deceived who study and believe the Word of God "And then shall they see the Son of man coming in the clouds with great power and glory."

It is thrilling, indeed, to realize that the signs which the Lord gave as indicating the end of the age and His personal return are being fulfilled, before our eyes, for the first time in history. One or another of these signs has appeared before ; never have they all occurred simultaneously as they are doing now. The return of the Jews to Palestine, their own land, for the first time in the nineteen centuries, is one of the great outstanding signs.

Therefore the Lord says, that we may be ready when He comes: "What I say unto you I say unto all, watch."

JOLLY JUGGLER OF AGRA

WONDERFUL AND VERY AMAZING TRICKS.

Rev. William T. Gunn, D.D., Writes of What He Saw This Juggler Do In India—Admits He Was Fooled But Enjoyed the Performance.

The boys and girls of India share in the good times of their older people at the time of these joyful, after their feasts, is to watch the very clever jugglers of India who do wonderful and very amazing tricks, says Rev. W. T. Gunn, D.D., in Forest and Outdoors. Now it so happened that our missionary deputation, the Moderator, the Missionary, the Lady of the Deputation and the editor saw one of these clever jugglers and this is the story of our meeting.

We were at the great city of Agra in Northern India and had seen the glory of India, the beautiful Taj Mahal, the marvellous marble monument of a great emperor to the wife he loved. After a busy day we were resting quietly at the Hotel, when a rushing party of American tourists had come and seen and gone again in a few hours, when in came a jolly old Indian looking like a picture of Santa Claus, done in brown. He wore a long cloak and round his head the folds of a great turban. His eyes just fairly twinkled with jolliness and he wanted to know did we want to see his tricks, and the price would be two rupees each, that is about seventy-five cents.

Now in India as one ever expects to get what they are and no one is expected to pay it or respected if they do; it is a little game to be enjoyed by both sides. So it came about that in the end the jolly juggler agreed to give his exhibition to the four of us for four rupees, and if you read back a bit you can figure for yourself how much that was.

First, the juggler and his boy—for there was a tired looking little chap who looked as if he wanted to go home to bed—these two spread out a square rug and placed at one side a couple of heavy satchels full of various things. What the boy did after that we did not know, he disappeared except when called on to bring something. Then the juggler rolled up his sleeves to show us he had nothing up them but his fat brown arms. We four were sitting facing him six or seven feet away, quite confident that we knew a great deal and were college trained and so could not be fooled. Oh, but we were, and that right gloriously!

What did he do? First, he took from his bag a monkey skull, to which he talked now and again and to which he pretended to listen. Then he took from his bag three little bowls and a brown nut, which he did under one of the bowls and called on us to guess which. The brown nut never was where we expected it to be. Even when the Moderator had the nut put under a bowl and put his foot down on the bowl—and the Moderator can put his foot down as every one knows—when he took his foot and the bowl were both lifted the nut was gone. Then, as we watched, one bowl was lifted and there were three nuts! How was it done? In some way too quick for us to see for all our watching.

Then he gave the Moderator a rupee to wrap up in a napkin and hold, and to the Lady of the Deputation a ring, also to twist tightly in a napkin and hold. In a moment he asked the Lady of the Deputation if she had the ring and the Moderator if he had the rupee. Both were as they had. So he asked the Lady of the Deputation to open the napkin—lo, there was no ring. He asked the Moderator to open his napkin, and lo, there was the ring—but no rupee. Then the juggler asked the editor if he had the rupee, and as the editor had not been given anything, and no one had been near him as far as he knew, he indignantly denied having the coin. But the old juggler persisted and said, "Pull out your handkerchief," when, to the amazement of the editor and every one else—out rolled the rupee. How did it all happen? We can't tell you at all, but you should have heard us laugh at each other and the juggler laugh at us all.

Next the juggler gave the Moderator a round stick about eighteen inches long, which he was to hold tightly, one end in each hand—and the Moderator held on for dear life. Again a ring was given the Lady of the Deputation to wrap in a napkin and hold tightly. Then a napkin was thrown lightly over the middle of the Moderator's stick. Turning to the Lady of the Deputation, the juggler asked to see the ring—but it wasn't in the napkin. Lifting the other napkin from the Moderator's stick there, around the middle of the stick, was the missing ring — and none of us could see how it got there.

Then we got him to do for us the "mango tree" trick after a bit of coaxing. First he got a small can full of earth which he soaked with water, and into which he put a seed about as big as a walnut. Then at one side he built with three sticks a frame like the frame of an Indian tepee, which he covered with a cloth and under which he put the can.

Coming back to his carpet he played more tricks and talked to the monkey skull. Going back to the little tepee he lifted the cloth and we could see a leaf bud about three inches long from the seed. Every time he went back there were more leaves till at last it was over two feet high and with many leaves. How did he manage it? We could not see.

Of course; they were all just clever tricks, for he offered to teach us how to do any of them, at two rupees each, but we preferred to let them stay as pleasant mysteries of a jolly evening.

To Test Your Diamonds.

A real diamond is much colder than an imitation one, and the best way to detect this difference in temperature is to touch the stones with the tongue. Sapphires, emeralds, rubies, garnets, and other precious stones may be tested in the same way.

Reindeer Meat.

Reindeer meat may find its way to the dining-rooms of Western Canada if the plans of the Dominion Reindeer Company are successful. This organization, which is now actively engaged in the reindeer business in Alaska is moving 4,000 fawns this spring to a lease of 200,000 acres in the McKenzie river territory, which is being granted by the Federal Government. It is estimated that sales of reindeer meat in 1929 will be $9,000 increasing to $45,000 in the following year.

CANADIAN'S GOOD WORK

Bishop Lea, Graduate of Toronto Colleges, Has Had Large Part In Work Among Japanese.

That one of the greatest and stroncest missionary societies in the world should withdraw support from a foreign field is startling news. T know that men are being recalled not because of lack or funds to carry on the work, nor because of the hopelessness of the undertaking, but because the task is finished, is something unique in the history of modern missions.

This is what the Church Missionary Society of London, England, is doing in the diocese of Kyushu, South Japan.

Bishop Lea, one of those who have been responsible for this achievement, according to the Toronto Star Weekly, is now at work consummating the endeavor of the Foreign Missionary Society in Japan and to build in Fukuoka a church which will be a centre for all religious activities in the diocese. In the interests of this work he has spent the last fifteen months lecturing and preaching it England.

Kyushu is the southern island, and supposed to be the oldest part of Japan. The gospel was first preached here by St. Francis Xavier, who met with much success. However, later terrible persecutions almost blotted out Christianity and the title of "Jashu" or "The Evil Religion" was given to it. This, and the natural conservation of the people, made the endeavors of missionaries who fifty years ago began to spread the gospel among the nine million inhabitants very difficult. They began work in the cities and later extended their labors to the mountains and valleys, and the result is a widespread evangelism covering 25,000 miles.

At the present time there are in the diocese seven churches completely self-supporting, requiring no further help from the mother church. Fifteen others are in different stages of self-support and are steadily moving forward. Twenty-one churches have been built and these area all active centres of religious life and work. There is also a flourishing divinity school for the training of Japanese clergy. For seven years this work was carried on in the dining-room and study of Bishop Lea's house in Fukuoka, but seven years ago a suitable building was erected, the students doing most of the unskilled labor in the construction.

Bishop Lea, although a missionary of the Church Society of England, and under the jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury, is a son of Canada. He is a graduate of the University of Toronto and Wycliffe College. More than thirty years ago he went out to Japan under the Canadian Church Missionary Society and labored in Tokio, later in Gifu, and then in Osaka.

Twenty years ago the Church Missionary Society of London, England, looked for an efficient executive leader to put at the head of their work in Kyushu. Rev. Arthur Lea, although then engaged in work under the Canadian church, was recommended as a man well fitted for the position. He was invited to England and there was consecrated bishop in Westminster Abbey. He has been doing most effective work ever since in South Japan.

Bishop Lea speaks most encouragingly of the future of the land where he has lived for so long and which is dear to his heart. Christianity, he says, is the most aggressive force in Japan to-day. It leads in social influence and ideals. Christian ethics are being taught in the schools.

THE SMALLEST NEWSPAPER.

Published at Thursday Island, Torres Straits.

Quality but not quantity is the keynote of the Daily Pilot, said to be the smallest daily newspaper in the world. It is published from Thursday Island, Torres Straits, and is a single sheet, about twelve by six inches, printed on one side only and costing sixpence a copy.

Its news, which is in a highly concentrated form, is largely concerned with shipping information, but the science of advertising is not unknown on Thursday Island. The Torres Straits Picture Company announce a cinema programme, and a dentist from Cairns, on the mainland, intimates that he will be on Thursday Island for three weeks.

A DEFINITE POLICY LAID DOWN

One of the greatest menaces to public safety on the highways, is the intoxicated automobile driver. Hon. George S. Henry, minister of highways, at a recent meeting in Toronto, was particularly emphatic in stating that the drunken driver must be eliminated from the highways of this province. Such offenders, he said ,deserve the limit of the law.

Prominent newspaper publishers at that meeting expressed the opinion that names of men convicted of driving their cars while they are under the influence of liquor, should not be suppressed in the phblication of police court news, as publicity is a great detriment to crime and the newspapers should lend their hearty support to the government in this respect in assisting it to enforce the Liquor Control Act.

The Napanee Express agrees with this sentiment. Intoxicated drivers have had very little sympathy or consideration from the Express in the past, but in view of the importance of this feature of public safety, we believe it to be in the interests of law enforcement and the protection of life and property that we define definitely our attitude towards police court offenders convicted of driving while drunk.

The Express will henceforth adhere strictly to the policy of publishing the names and addresses of all persons convicted of this character of offence. It will make no difference who the offender is, rich or poor, high or low, influential or unknown. The Express makes this statement in the interest of those compelled to use the highways and we hope the promise of publicity for all such offenders will serve as a warning and will act as an effective deterrent to all those who may be tempted to offend.

NEANDERTHAL MAN.

British Anthropologist Says He Was Species All His Own.

Neanderthal man, whose low-browed skulls and crude stone implements have been found in a number of caves and other sites in Europe, was a separate species of the human genus, quite distinct from modern man, declares G. Elliot-Smith, well-known British anthropologist, writing in Nature, one of the leading English scientific periodicals. He cites the recently published investigations of a compatriot, G. M. Morant, in support of his views.

This opinion is at variance with the views of Dr. Alex Hrdlicka, famous American student of the antecedents of the human race, as expressed in his recent Huxley lecture in England, where he received the award of the Huxley medal, the highest honor within the gift of British anthropologists. Dr. Hrdlicka advanced evidence to maintain his contention that Neanderthal man was a part of the main line of human family descent.

SOME FLOWERING BULBS

With the approach of the blooming season for such bulbs as tulips, narsissi, and hyacinth, the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa, has issued a timely bulletin entitled, "Some Flowering Bulbs." The bulletin is from the pen of Mr. E. M. Straight, Superintendent of the Experimental Station for Vancouver Island, who has been making a detailed study of bulb production in Canada. Pacific Coast nurserymen have taken up the growing of bulbs that we have been in the habit of importing in very large quantities, particularly from Holland, each year. Before pronouncing on the value of the Canadian grown bulbs as compared with European stock, practically all of the Experimental Farms and Stations were supplied with stocks derived from the home and foreign fields. Each Station was asked to grow the bulbs and compare them for size, yield, vigour, quality of bloom, and such other points as would bring out the merits of the Canadian bulb. The replies at the end of a year's experience have shown Canadian grown bulbs to equal in all respects the imported stock, and in most cases superior to it. Expressed in percentage terms many of the reports show Canadian bulbs to have been from 25 to 100 per cent stronger and better than the foreign bulbs. The bulletin gives the history of the different kinds classified, describes their propagation, gives advice on the culture, and describes large numbers of varieties. The bulletin, which is No. 95 and is obtainable from the Publications Branch of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa, contains a section on the common bulb diseases by F. L. Drayton, Plant Pathologist at the Central Experimental Farm at Ottawa.

Clocks That Don't Stop.

Does a clock which is kept going by variations in temperature and atmospheric pressure solve the problem of perpetual motion?

A clock of this kind has been invented by a Swiss engineer. He has made two clocks on the same principle, and both of them have been running for months without stopping or rewinding.

While the commercial possibilities of the new invention are very great, many experts contend that it isn't really an example of perpetual motion, because it draws its energy from outside sources.

But what is very nearly a perpetual motion clock has been invented by Lord Rayleigh. The energy in it is supplied by a microscopic piece of radium, and the clock is expected to "keep on keeping time" for many years.

Bore Deeper for Oil.

Improved methods of deep drilling below productive oil sands will disclose, in many areas, deposits of oil not hitherto available and which will be tantamount to the discovery of new fields, the Mariand committee on conservation, appointed by the American Petroleum Institute, declared in its report.

Improved methods of producing have been perfected, it added, which will make possible recovery of oil from these lower sands; the limit of deep drilling had not been reached.

CANADIAN WOMEN'S WORK

BY LUCINDA.

The sad death of a Toronto school boy from eating water hemlock makes us ask ourselves if we know the poisonous plants well enough to warn the children. Why not send to the Department of Agriculture for a book with the names of dangerous plants ? Or better still, why do not the Women's Institutes ask for a lecturer to come and describe what the poisonous plants look like. Just now the children are gathering wild flowers and will find every field the mandrake or may apple, with leaves like an umbrella and waxen white flower hiding under the large leaf. The leaves, flowers and the fruit, that is like a small apple when it ripens, are harmless, but the root is a deadly poison. Then there is the henbane, with yellow flowers like a gloxinia, and the wild parsnip and the white hellebere or Indian poke weed and soon the night shade will show purple blossoms like a potato flower and later in the year its pretty red berries would attract small children. It grows by our roadsides and often in piles and mortar in the foundation of a house destroyed by fire. The poison hemlock is called the spotted cowbane, because it has a stem spotted with a dark red color. It is the plant used by the ancient Greeks to poison condemned prisoners and the poison of which Socrates died. The safest way is to make the children understand that they should not eat anything they find in the fields or woods, but it would surely be wise to learn the plants so well that we can tell the dangerous ones.

* * * *

The girls are busy with soft ball, and a pretty picture they make on the green field. Earlier in the season we referred to the game as a good out-of-door sport. Be real sports girls, and take a beating with a good grace and a victory without being triumphant over the defeated team.

* * * *

Let the children have a garden, they will take great pride in it and will be helping the family by growing the green vegetables we should eat in the summer, rather than too much meat. In the country schools, seeds, potatoes, etc., are given out by the Department of Agriculture and the pupils grow them in their own gardens and in the autumn show the result at the school fair. It is a fine thing for the young people of the land to learn to develop it and to make it produce food for themselves and others. The boys and girls in the town schools have not always as good a chance but most people have a yard at any rate, where something can be grown. If you have not natural fertilizer get the proper kind at the seed store. It is better to work with good tools, and folly to try to raise really fine vegetables in a dust heap, when for a very small sum you can have better results.

"How I miss my country neighbors," said a widow who had come to live in a town. "At home I always had some one to help me put the garden in or take off the storm doors and windows. Here I don't even know the name of the people at the end of the row and they don't care whether I am alive or dead." - Has neighborliness gone out of fashion? Perhaps even in the country it is not quite so much a matter of course as it was. Is it weakness on the part of her as our mothers used to ? Now we say we want the men and women from the old land to come to help us develop our country. Will we give them a hearty welcome when they come or will we put on superior airs and think they are stupid because they know as little as our forefathers did when they came to Canada? Do we ever think what we would do if we were suddenly set down in an English city and told to earn a living ? Would we know just what to do and how to go about it ? Would we be hurt if the people laughed at us and gave us the poorest house in the town to live in because we were strangers ? What can the Women's Institutes do to foster a true spirit of neighborliness ?

* * * *

How pretty the frocks for the little folk are now and how simple. We were looking over some old magazines the other day that showed the fashions of the nineties and everyone exclaimed, "Did we really wear clothes like that?" Even the children had waists and high collars and the sleeves were simply wonderful. The old world does go a bit forward in spite of those who insist upon "the good old days."

* * * *

The men of Ontario are doing their best to encourage the tourist who is already with us, to "come again and stay longer the next time." What about the women ? Tourist lodges and tea rooms are springing up here and there and we have heard of several depots for work rugs, your own design or one of the designs your grandmother worked if possible, patchwork quilts, neatly made in one of the old patterns, homemade jam, marmalade and pickles, homemade bread, cake and pies will attract the tourist, where there is a tourist camp and the provisions brought with them can be augmented by fresh home cooking. If you have rooms, keep the windows open and have plenty of hot water and fresh linen. Already we see cars on the road that have come to visit us. Make their passengers welcome.

Try this recipe for custard rhubarb pie. Wash, wipe and cut into inch lengths enough strawberry rhubarb for a pie, 2 cupsful. Sprinkle with sugar and let stand for a few minutes. Draw off the juice and pour boiling water over the rhubarb, let stand five minutes and drain well. Mix together 1 tablespoon of flour, 1 small cup of sugar, 1 tablespoon of butter and the yolk of one egg. Add the juice to the rhubarb and mix with the batter. Pour into unbaked pie crust and bake. Make a meringue of the egg white, sweeten and place on top of the pie and brown in the oven. Serve cold.

HEALTH SERVICE OF THE CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

PREVENTION OF HEART DISEASE

In Canada, during the year 1926, over 11,000 persons died of heart disease, the total deaths from all causes being approximately 107,000.

Heart disease, which kills in adult life is, in a large percentage of cases, due to conditions which occurred in childhood. The prevention of heart disease therefore, in adult life, in many cases, depends upon the proper care of the growing child.

Heart disease seems to be associated with the type of infection we call rheumatic. We do not know a great deal about this rheumatic infection, but we know something of real value in the prevention of its serious results.

Growing pains in children should be considered as evidence of a rheumatic infection. They frequently precede definite attacks of rheumatism, chorea (St. Vitus' dance) and heart conditions.

Sore throat or diseased tonsils without soreness of the throat, are evidence of a possible centre or focus of the rheumatic infection.

Chorea is a rheumatic infection. At first it may be nothing more than a restlessness or fidgetiness, the jerky movements coming later.

All such cases should be placed under the family physician for treatment, if heart disease is to be prevented.

All those who have damaged hearts do not die of heart disease. If proper care be taken, they usually live a long time and die of some other malady It is those persons who will not, or who practically cannot take proper care, who grow progressively worse.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College St. Toronto, will be answered. Questions as to diagnosis and treatment will not be answered.

"I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help. My help cometh from the Lord which made heaven and earth. He will not suffer thy foot to be moved : he that keepeth thee will not slumber. Behold he that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep. The Lord is thy keeper ; the Lord is thy shade upon thy right hand. The Lord shall preserve thee from all evil ; he shall preserve thy soul The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in from this time forth and for evermore." Ps. 121 : 1-5, 7, 8.

It seems that one hing is now a duty of the post. It is only a week ago that Postmaster-General of the Royal Society of Arts made a plea in scientific circles by advertising for several girls who could blush in order that he might determine the rise of temperature due to blushing.

A clergyman, who should know something about it, declared that brides do not blush as much as they used to, and that scarcely one woman in a hundred ever blushes at all.

Blushes are particularly susceptible to flushed cheeks, which is more noticeable in contrast with their pale complexion.

But the perfect blush is chiefly seen among brunettes.

"Dead Letters" In France.

In France, the "dead letter" situation is becoming worse and worse. During 1925 there were 2,800,000 letters and postcards which could not be forwarded because of incomplete or mis-spelt addresses.

In August, 1927, it was announced that the figure had risen to 3,000,000 a year. About 20 per cent. of the letters were those addressed to foreign countries. Very large numbers of books go astray in the French post. Before the accumulations are disposed of officials of the National Library look them over carefully and pick out such as they want for that institution.

The Knight of the Silver Star

A Romance of Drussenland

By PERCY BREBNER

Copyright, 1927, by R. F. Fenno & Co

I lost count of time. Days and nights passed, and I knew that I had been a prisoner for a long while. An imaginative man might have hoped that he had been forgotten. I knew my enemies too well to think so, and Costa was constantly advising me regarding the future. He seemed to enjoy sitting in my cell, and if his conversation was not of the most consoling kind it helped to pass some weary hours. I have never been able to make up my mind what the Spaniard's true feelings toward me were, whether he had some sort of respect for me or whether it delighted him to speak of the grewsome tortures which were in store for me.

He came one evening late—later than was his wont—and with him came O'Ryan. My quondam friend had evidently recovered, for he walked vigorously, and his arm looked capable of wielding a good sword again.

"It is tomorrow," said Costa, fixing the torch in the ring in the wall.

"What is tomorrow?"

"Your trial. We are just in Yadasara. We give a man a trial—generally. It seems to me a useless waste of time. It comes to the same thing in the end."

I thought this quite probable.

"Shall I be allowed to speak?" I asked.

"Oh, yes, but it would be well to have a care what you say, eh, captain?"

Thus directly appealed to, O'Ryan, who had stood silently with folded arms, burst out laughing.

"I might say too much to please that rascally companion of yours, is that it?" I asked Costa, nodding contemptuously toward O'Ryan.

"Rascal!" exclaimed the Irishman excitedly.

"Steady," Costa interposed. "You will doubtless have the pleasure of witnessing your enemy's discomfiture, but it is not for you to administer the punishment."

The city turned out to see me on the morrow when I was taken from the fortress to the palace. The king was surrounded by his court and was talking and laughing with those about him. A callous assembly it was to try a man for his life! At a little distance from me stood Daria, very pale and very beautiful. Had my courage faltered for a moment the sight of her, firm, resolute and fearless, would have filled me with new strength. To her I bowed; to the king I made no obeisance. Near the king sat Count Vasca and next to the count Lady Aldrida. The count was pale—perhaps by reason of his recent wounds. Lady Aldrida looked as if the proceedings thoroughly amused her.

"I AM NO TRAITOR."

How difficult some Christian laws are to obey! How could I help hating this woman and this man?

Then the smiles went from the king's face, and those around him were silent.

"Madame," he said, turning to Daria, "there is little need for us to tell you of what you are accused. In Drussenland there cannot be two rulers. It has pleased you to set yourself up against your rightful king and with the help of traitors to their king and their country to defy us for this long season, bringing war where peace should be. At your door lie in heaps the men who have fallen in defense of their country, and their blood cries to us to be avenged. Are there any words that can say aught in your defense? If so, speak them. This court shall judge you, not we, and truly your fair face should find many a one to deal out lenient judgment."

"I am no traitor."

The words came firm and clear, no suspicion of trembling in her voice. She was as much a queen now as when I had first seen her, surrounded by her knights.

"I stand here princess of Drussenland," she said. "The fortune of war places me here standing, while the real traitor remains seated in my presence. You, who call yourself the king, are no king, nor are you established here in Yadasara by the will of true Drussenlanders. You are king only by the help of these paid foreigners, whose very names and country are unknown to you. For the judgment of your court I care nothing."

"We shall find means to subdue that bold spirit within you, madame," said the king.

"To kill it, not to subdue it," she answered.

"So have many spoken. Words come easily. But let us argue a little, madame. In your accusations be just. We are not all foreigners. Am I not a Drussenlander?"

"One I should have delighted to honor had you been true to your country and your sovereign," was the answer.

I expected to see the king become savage, but he astonished me by laughing heartily. There was something of our own Charles II about this monarch. If an answer were ready enough he could appreciate it, even if it were against himself.

"See what we have lost. By being a king we forego the happiness of being honored by a queen. What will you say then, madame, of Count Vasca? Surely he is a true Drussenlander since he is your kinsman?"

"There are no words fitting. You and your assumption of majesty I can understand. You have fought me face to face, a determined struggle in which you have won. It was treachery, indeed, but it was treachery open to the sun. If treachery can be honest, yours was. But for the man who hides his treachery behind a smile, who works in secret to destroy those he professes to honor, for the false friend, the coward who dare not be an open enemy, there are no words. Gather all the scoundrels there are in Drussenland together, take from each one the meanest trait he has, and of these traits build you up a man. Even then shall you have a man I would rather claim kindred with than with Count Vasca."

"It seems you are a dangerous friend," said the king, turning to him.

"Your majesty has not found me so."

"True. You see, madame, it is well sometimes to use similar weapons to those used by an adversary. If your enemy sends a spy we, too, must do the same or our ignorance may lose us the day. Count Vasca has received harsh language from your lips. What have you to say to your knight there? True, he was faithful to you, but be just. He is a spy. By a lie he entered Yadasara. He betrayed his friend, one Captain O'Ryan, who is with us to bear witness against him. More—he attempted to kill him. What harsh words have you for that man there?"

The king's finger, pointed at me, caused all eyes to turn toward me; Daria's also.

"Gather the best in Drussenland," she said slowly. "Take what is bravest, truest, from them all and make me a man. A great Drussenlander indeed would he be, yet head and shoulders over him would rise Sir Verrall—Clinton Verrall—my knight of the Silver Star."

For some moments there was silence, and no voice was raised to sneer at the character which had been given me.

"You have a powerful advocate, Sir Knight," said the king presently, "but there is another side to the question which condemns you deeply."

"I am not worthy either of such high praise, your majesty, or such deep condemnation."

"You are modest as well as valiant, it would seem."

"I lay claim to being an honest gentleman. The world holds no higher distinction."

"Do honest men lie?" he asked severely. "You did, else had you not entered Yadasara the first time."

"Pardon, your highness. It was Captain O'Ryan who gave certain accounts of me, which satisfied you. In truth, my coming to the city was in the nature of a flight from my enemies."

I was not disposed to spare O'Ryan. Why should I be?

"A valiant knight does not flee from his enemies," said the king.

"I fled from a would be assassin—Count Vasca."

"Truly, count, you have grievous charges laid against you."

"Who would believe the word of a spy?" said the count savagely.

"That is well spoken, Sir Knight. A spy! What say you to that?"

"Even what your majesty said just now. It is wise to handle similar weapons to those used by an enemy. In the princess' camp there was not one spy, but a hundred. Ever since I came to Drussenland Count Vasca and his friends have been working to betray the princess. She had not been here now to hear your judgment had not that scoundrel turned against her in the day of battle, sealing a long season of treachery by a crime that any man must revolt at, that your majesty must hate."

"You are here to defend yourself, Sir Knight, not to accuse our friends."

"I have no defense," I answered. "I have fought for the princess I serve. I have done what a man can do, and my conscience acquits me. But I have a word for your majesty, if you will give me leave."

"Are words from such a man worth your majesty's attention?" said Vasca.

"When this man came to Drussenland he made great promises. He spoke boastfully that he would place the princess on the throne in Yadasara, that he would find the treasure which, it is said, is hidden in this land. This man has accused me of treachery, but my deepest sin has been in throwing in my lot with wiser men rather than be carried away by the boastful promises of a deceiver."

"That is not all your sin, Count Vasca," I said. "Your majesty has accepted the friendship of a man who, while he fawns upon you, is plotting your ruin."

The count laughed contemptuously.

"The proof," said the king, rising from his chair.

"Captain O'Ryan can give it you."

"The count spoke wisely when he said that your words were not worth our attention. We have heard that story from Captain O'Ryan's lips. The captain has confessed that he was in error. His zeal for our safety and some personal dislike to the count, fostered by yourself, Sir Knight, made him hasty in his judgment. Their hands have met in confession and forgiveness. Is this all you have to say?"

"One man's word against another's is poor security for truth," I answered. "I would that I could prove the truth of my words at the sword's point with the count, with O'Ryan or any other man who doubts me."

"Enough, enough!" cried the king. "Take him back to the fortress. At our pleasure he shall take back his lies and perchance tell some secret of this treasure. There are hard questioners in the fortress, as you will find."

"They must be hard indeed to wring from me one good word for the villain beside your majesty."

"They have drawn out a confession of love for a man's worst enemy before now," said the king.

"Death puts an end to all questions," I answered. "In my country men fear not death if met in an honest way. I claim no gift. I ask for no mercy. Yet I would ask one favor of your majesty."

"What favor?"

"Let me pay the penalty for myself and for this lady."

Daria made one step toward the king.

"I pray you not to listen to the knight."

"Truly, madame, his own sins are heavy enough to answer for. It seems, count, that your rival as well as your accuser stands before us."

"Not my rival, your majesty," and Vasca laid his hand on Aldrida's arm.

"We have no favors to grant," said the king. "Take them to the fortress.

We will appoint a day for the questioning. They shall both die. So valiant a knight and so fair a lady are too dangerous to live in Drussenland."

Daria made an effort to come to me, but the soldiers stopped her, and she was led from the hall. I heard Lady Aldrida laugh a merry, musical peal as I was taken away. I almost wished that I had killed her that night in the city.

CHAPTER XXII.

A MAN could hardly be in more desperate condition than I was. Except for Daria, who was powerless, I had no friend. I was to die—how soon I did not know. I was to be tortured, and since the king had such fiends as Vasca and Lady Aldrida beside him there was no knowing what horrors they might not persuade him to perpetrate upon me. Yet, strange to say, I was not utterly cast down.

Costa heaved a fat, heavy sigh of relief when he got me back into my dungeon.

"I said it was all waste of time," he remarked in a callous manner. "And you didn't take my advice. You spoke too much."

He sat thoughtfully for a few moments.

"About these executioners?"

"Well?"

"You must make friends with them."

"How? I have nothing to give in exchange for their courtesy."

"One doesn't do much for nothing in this country as a rule," he laughed, "nor in any other country, for that matter. But we have a certain admiration for a brave man. It might be managed. We must make friends with these executioners."

His friendliness encouraged me.

"Would you grant me a favor?" I asked.

He was on his guard in a moment.

"It is not easy to grant favors in my position."

"This is not a large one. Tell me, am I still allowed a daily constitutional on the ramparts?"

"Oh, yes. You will be treated well until your last day dawns."

"And the princess too?"

"Yes, and the other prisoners too."

"Could you not so arrange it that we might meet upon the ramparts?"

"Impossible!"

"Think, Costa, she is a woman. A kind word of encouragement would mean so much to her."

"Trust me, I will speak the kind word."

"She and I are friends in affliction; it would mean more to her if I spoke it."

"I do not doubt that," he said, with a chuckle. "You attempted to deceive me when you said you did not love her."

"I reverence her."

"Yet you say you do not love her?"

"Have I actually said that? Come, Costa, grant me this favor, and you may demand of me anything it is in my power to give. You shall stand by me while I speak to her. In a few days I shall be lying ledgen footed in the river below us. It will be good to remember that you did a comrade a service."

"I like you, Verrall, but I love myself better. I cannot do it. I will see what I can do with the executioners."

Had I had only myself to think of I believe I should have made a dash for liberty during one of my daily constitutions and thrown myself from the ramparts. I had Daria to think of. What good was an easy death for me if she were left to suffer?

In these days, indeed, it would have been difficult to accomplish such an escape. I was a show prisoner. At the time of my constitutional a small crowd collected upon the ramparts to watch me as I walked to and fro. There was, however, a very unpleasant side to being a show prisoner. At different times my cell was visited by the aristocracy of the city, even women and children coming to look upon the man who had once escaped from Yadasara and was so mighty a warrior.

My fame had outstripped all reason. I remember a child who came one day, a dark haired little girl with thoughtful eyes. She stood before me, looking at me intently. Presently I smiled at her, to her great delight, for she turned to her mother and remarked:

"I don't believe he would hurt me."

Poor little woman! I should think not. Evidently I was the fashionable bogy to frighten naughty children with.

O'Ryan constantly came with Costa, never alone. The Spaniard was afraid that his lieutenant might do me an injury. O'Ryan never spoke to me, and over and over again Costa rallied at him for not making my last days as pleasant as possible.

"Surely it is revenge enough to see a former comrade in such a bad case," he urged.

But the Irishman was obdurate. I wondered that he could have changed so completely.

One evening Costa came, accompanied by four men, as villainous looking a crew surely as could be imagined. They entered stealthily, as though they were on a secret mission, and I rose from my seat, while a strange thrill traveled up my spine. I thought my time had come.

"I could not bring them before," said Costa. "You have been holding so many receptions."

I was relieved.

"The executioners," I said, trying to appear as if their coming had not disconcerted me. "Gentlemen, I regret that the poorness of my dwelling does not allow me to offer you much hospitality nor much comfort, I fear. Perhaps we may have some wine."

"I ordered it as we came," said Costa.

Two of my guests lounged against the wall, and two sat upon the edge of the table. O'Ryan brought the wine and retired into a corner. I could not see the expression of his face as Costa talked on my behalf.

"There are some men it is a pleasure to help slowly out of life," the Spaniard went on with diabolical carelessness. "The cries of a coward and a craven are good music, but there are others who, having faced death brave

Simple Arithmetic

Simple arithmetic will solve the problem of why "cash prices" should be lower than "credit" prices.

$1.00 paid in cash to-day for merchandise goes out for other merchandise to-morrow, on which another profit will be made. $1.00 to be paid in 10 months can't be put to work until the 10 months is up and the money paid in. The purchasing power of this "10 months" dollar then, is less than that of the cash dollar.

C.D.S. Goods are all marked on the "Cash price" basis. They can be, should be and are better values.
